vs.	)	Industrial Relations Commission

DIVISION OF EMPLOYMENT SECURITY,	)

Respondent.	)	FILED: March 21, 2023

Smaila Mujakic (Claimant) appeals from the decision of the Labor and Industrial Relations Commission (the Commission), which concluded Claimant failed to show good cause to excuse her untimely appeal from a determination that she was overpaid unemployment benefits.

AFFIRMED.

DIVISION ONE HOLDS: The Commission did not err in affirming the Appeals Tribunal's decision finding the overpayment determination was final due to Claimant's failure to timely appeal therefrom.

Claimant's appeal from her overpayment determination was untimely because it was due within thirty days of the date she was mailed the determination, but Claimant failed to file an appeal until more than sixty days after this deadline. Although she contends she had good cause to extend the thirty-day filing period pursuant to section 288.270.10, RSMo. (2016), this "good cause" exception does not apply to non-fraudulent overpayment determinations like Claimant's.
