Aaron Davis appeals from the decision of the Labor and Industrial Relations Commission denying his claim for unemployment compensation following his separation from J.P. Collier, Inc., d/b/a FASTSIGNS (Employer). Davis challenges the Commission’s determination that he quit without good cause attributable to Employer. Specifically, Davis argues that the Commission failed to consider certain facts creating an intolerable situation.

AFFIRMED.

DIVISION ONE HOLDS: Good faith - an essential element of good cause - requires that an employee express his concerns in order to provide the employer an opportunity to correct or ameliorate conditions that the employer didn’t know were problematic. Davis didn’t satisfy this requirement.

Opinion by: Clifford H. Ahrens, J., Roy L. Richter, P.J., and Glenn A. Norton, J., concur.

Attorney for Appellant: Aaron E. Davis

Attorney for Respondent: Christine Katherine Lesicko
