FAMILY SUPPORT DIVISION, ET AL.,	)

Opinion

Timothy Wells (Father) appeals from the circuit court's denial of his petition for review of an order entered by the Department of Social Services Family Support Division (FSD). Father raises two points on appeal. In Point One, Father argues FSD erred when it declined to modify his child support obligation because he did not need to show a substantial and continuing change in circumstances as it had been at least three years since the last modification. In Point Two, Father argues FSD erred when it refused to receive and consider evidence of Mother's remarriage in support of his modification request.

DISMISSED.

DIVISION TWO HOLDS: Because Father filed a judicial motion to modify his support obligation in the circuit court and a judicial modification judgment has been entered retroactively modifying child support, the administrative modification proceeding has been rendered moot. Accordingly, we dismiss the appeal.
